CHAPTER TEST FORM B

1. Jay's Treaty angered southerners.
2. Congress passed a tax on American-made whiskey. Answers may add that farmers could not afford the tax on whiskey and didn't understand why they should have to pay taxes on something they made themselves.
3. Hamilton suggested limiting the charter of the national bank to 20 years. (Congress could decide whether or not to extend it beyond that time.) He also asked each state to start its own bank. He did these things because he did not want to upset supporters of states' rights, and he did not want to allow the national bank to have a monopoly.
4. Madison thought President George Washington had gone beyond his authority when he made the proclamation. He did not think Washington had the right to issue the proclamation without the approval of Congress.
5. A citizen might have complained about the electoral college.
6. Hamilton wanted to add a tariff to foreign goods, called a protective tariff. He knew higher taxes on foreign goods would make those goods more expensive. He thought higher prices would make Americans buy more U.S. goods. Hamilton's intention was to protect American manufacturers from foreign competition.
7. The U.S. southern boundary was defined by 31° N latitude.

UNIT TEST FORM B

1. Antifederalists opposed the Constitution because they thought it gave the central government too much power. They also thought the document should include a section that guaranteed individual rights.
2. The Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom stated that no person could be required to attend or be forced to pay taxes for a specific church.
3. The president can veto, or reject, laws that Congress passes.
4. Majority rule is the idea that the greatest number of people in a society make policy for everyone. This principle can interfere with the individual rights of people in minority groups. Examples can include: If most people are Protestant, they might vote to restrict or ban the practice of other religions. If most people are white, they might vote to limit the rights of another racial or ethnic group.
